Further to its development and up cycling of seeds from waste from food production, Phytoverse Oils has created several new seed oils that contain low levels of Linoleic Acid < 10% and high levels of Alpha Linoleic Acid > 50% creating oils that have a reverse ratio of 1:5 or even greater. These oils are the first of its type even seen.

These oils also have the correct ratios of oleic acid (oral & dermal) and erucic acid (dermal) which are synergistic with alpha linoleic acid which boosts its activity and repairs and inhibits the damage of linoleic acid. Developed to help to reverse the toxic effects of linoleic acid these oils are now seen as the tools to reduce and eliminate the effects of linoleic acid toxicity in our body and skin.

The above oils are a refinement of our upcycling research and development project and the emphasis that oils are not the same and that the fatty acid profiles and percentages of these fatty acids must be taken into consideration. Oils that contain 50% + linoleic acid and have a linoleic acid content of < 10% such as Tomato Seed Oil, Sunflower Seed Oil, Safflower Seed Oil and Cucumber Seed Oil etc have limited application in the authors opinion.

Please contact Phytoverse for more information on these oils.

** Produced from the process of upcycling from food and juice production.

Upcycling is the process of transforming by-products, waste materials, or unwanted products into new materials or products of higher quality or value. Upcycling focuses on repurposing items without fundamentally altering their original form, giving them a second life and new function.

Upcycling offers numerous benefits for communities by reducing waste, fostering economic opportunities, and promoting community engagement. It minimizes environmental impact, supports local economies, and strengthens social bonds through collaborative projects.

Notes

1. Due to seasonal variation essential oils may vary in chemical composition, colour and odour from season to season. Difference in the origin and purity of botanical material, distillation apparatus and storage conditions can also have a significant effect on quality. To minimize these variations many oils are subject to standards set by government authorities or the supplier. Where such standards do exist, Phytoverse will supply oils to our customer's specifications.
2. Whilst most essential oils are supplied as single distilled, some oils are subject to further processing to remove impurities or standardize their composition for specific applications. This can entail a variety of processes ranging from filtering and blending to re-distillation, fractionation, reconstitution and bleaching.
3. Prices may change without notification due to seasonal variation or supply.
